If you need medical help and your GP practice is closed, call the NHS 111 number. The call is free, from landlines and mobiles. When you call 111, an adviser will ask you questions to find out what's wrong and give you advice or direct you to the most appropriate service. You can obtain 24 hour general medical advice by telephoning 111.

If you don't speak English you can request an interpreter. For health needs that are not urgent, you should call your GP. If a health professional has given you a number to call for a particular condition, you should continue to use that number.
